Slavery Webquest

Directions: Have students individually visit an Internet virtual field trip or interactive museum. Suggested websites are listed below. After the students have visited the site, summarize the information they have learned about an aspect of the history of slavery in the United States in at least ½ page.

Virtual Field Trips Available:

Slavery in America Website

Interactive Exhibitions:

The Melrose Interactive Slavery Environment, more than a year in the making, takes your students into Melrose, a pre-Civil War “suburban estate.” Students will explore the estate from the perspective of the men, women, and children who were enslaved there.

“Roads to Freedom” is an interactive exhibition that will allow students to explore the six routes most frequently taken by enslaved men and women who were seeking their liberty. Combining primary source documents, images, slave narratives, spoken narration, and original music, the exhibition conveys the enormity of the challenges slaves faced and the intelligence, courage, and persistence with which they attempted to surmount them.
