The saltworks at the oasis of Taghaza, by: Ibn Battuta, 1325-1354

After twenty-five days [from Sijilmasa] we reached Taghaza, an unattractive village, with the curious feature that its houses and mosques are built of blocks of salt, roofed with camel skins. There are no trees there, nothing but sand. In the sand is a salt mine; they dig for the salt, and find it in thick slabs, lying one on top of the other, as though they had been tool-squared and laid under the surface of the earth. A camel will carry two of these slabs.

No one lives at Taghaza except the slaves of the Massufa tribe, who dig for the salt; they subsist on dates imported from Dar'a and Sijilmasa, camels' flesh, and millet imported from the Negrolands. The negroes come up from their country and take away the salt from there. At Iwalatan a load of salt brings eight to ten mithqals; in the town of Mali [Mali] it sells for twenty to thirty, and sometimes as much as forty. The negroes use salt as a medium of exchange, just as gold and silver is used [elsewhere]; they cut it up into pieces and buy and sell with it. The business done at Taghaza, for all its meanness, amounts to an enormous figure in terms of hundredweights of gold-dust.

We passed ten days of discomfort there, because the water is brackish and the place is plagued with flies. Water supplies are laid in at Taghaza for the crossing of the desert which lies beyond it, which is a ten-nights' journey with no water on the way except on rare occasions. We indeed had the good fortune to find water in plenty, in pools left by the rain. One day we found a pool of sweet water between two rocky prominences. We quenched our thirst at it and then washed our clothes. Truffles are plentiful in this desert and it swarms with lice, so that people wear string necklaces containing mercury, which kills them.

Life at Walata, Women in Muslim West Africa by: Ibn Buttuta, 1325-1354

My stay at Iwalatan lasted about fifty days; and I was shown honour and entertained by its inhabitants. It is an excessively hot place, and boasts a few small date-palms, in the shade of which they sow watermelons. Its water comes from underground waterbeds at that point, and there is plenty of mutton to be had. The garments of its inhabitants, most of whom belong to the Massufa tribe, are of fine Egyptian fabrics.

Their women are of surpassing beauty, and are shown more respect than the men. The state of affairs amongst these people is indeed extraordinary. Their men show no signs of jealousy whatever; no one claims descent from his father, but on the contrary from his mother's brother. A person's heirs are his sister's sons, not his own sons. This is a thing which I have seen nowhere in the world except among the Indians of Malabar. But those are heathens; these people are Muslims, punctilious in observing the hours of prayer, studying books of law, and memorizing the Koran. Yet their women show no bashfulness before men and do not veil themselves, though they are assiduous in attending the prayers. Any man who wishes to marry one of them may do so, but they do not travel with their husbands, and even if one desired to do so her family would not allow her to go.

The women there have “friends” and “companions” amongst the men outside their own families, and the men in the same way have “companions” amongst the women of other families. A man may go into his house and find his wife entertaining her “companion” but he takes no objection to it. One day at Iwalatan I went into the qadi’s house, after asking his permission to enter, and found with him a young woman of remarkable beauty. When I saw her I was shocked and turned to go out, but she laughed at me, instead of being overcome by shame, and the qadi said to me “Why are you going out? She is my companion.” I was amazed at their conduct, for he was a theologian and a pilgrim [to Mecca] to boot. I was told that he had asked the sultan's permission to make the pilgrimage that year with his “companion”--whether this one or not I cannot say--but the sultan would not grant it.

Ibn Battuta judges the character of the people of Mali, 1325-1354

The negroes possess some admirable qualities. They are seldom unjust, and have a greater abhorrence of injustice than any other people. Their sultan shows no mercy to anyone who is guilty of the least act of it. There is complete security in their country. Neither traveller nor inhabitant in it has anything to fear from robbers or men of violence. They do not confiscate the property of any white man who dies in their country, even if it be uncounted wealth. On the contrary, they give it into the charge of some trustworthy person among the whites, until the rightful heir takes possession of it. They are careful to observe the hours of prayer, and assiduous in attending them in congregations, and in bringing up their children to them.
Use what you learned about Mali in the readings on in the map activity to complete sheet.

Essential Question: How did trade lead to the development of a unique culture on the East Coast of Africa?

THE BRITISH MUSEUM

The wealth of Africa

The Swahili Coast

Sheet 3: How important was trade to the Swahili Cities?

The Swahili city states apparently produced little themselves. They seemed to rely mostly on exchanging other people's goods. See if you can work out from these sources what they traded, and how successful they were.

Source 1

Kilwa's wealth came from trade, not production. Merchants were the middlemen in a network of trade. In Kilwa, grains were grown, as well as coconuts, pineapples and other fruit. Meat was bought from inland herdsman and fish from neighboring villages. Kilwa made money from trade and taxes. Merchants using the port of Sofala had to pay import and export taxes, and there were notoriously high. One ivory tusk in seven had to be paid to the sultan of Kilwa.

Davidson 1968: 112

Ancient navigators realised that the monsoon winds regularly blew from India towards East Africa from October to April and in the opposite direction from June to September. Taking advantage of the winds traders reached the [Swahili] coast and discovered a number of potentially valuable raw materials.

Elkiss 1973: 120

Source 5

There was a lucrative trade between the Swahili coast on one hand and India and China on the other. Kilwa, Malindi and Mombasa were great trading centres. Ships from India and China brought cotton cloths, silk clothes, wheat, grey, red and yellow beads, spears, axes, knives and porcelain to the Swahili ports. At the port cities... goods were transported in small vessels to the Sofala coast where they were bartered for wax, gold, and especially 'soft' ivory for the manufacture of furniture and handles in China.

Gadzekpo 1999: 112

Of the many cities that rose to fame and wealth after 1200, none was more successful than Kilwa.

Davidson 1968: 106

Questions

1. Which goods did Kilwa produce itself?
2. Which goods came from East Asia?
3. What made trade with East Asia possible?
4. Which goods came from Africa?
5. How did Kilwa make money from this trade?
6. How successful were the Swahili cities at trade?
Sheet 5: How Powerful Were the Swahili Rulers?

There is limited information on the political history of Kilwa or other Swahili states, so historians have to make up their minds based on archaeological remains such as the palace, later Swahili chronicles, and on the occasional accounts of travellers. See if you can work out what the rulers were like.

Source 1

This sultan is a very humble man. He sits with the poor people and eats with them, and gives respect to people of religion.

Ibn Battuta describing the Sultan of Kilwa (c. 1330), in Hamdun & King 1998: 24

Source 3

All the people walked barefoot, and there were raised over his head four canopies of coloured silk and on the top of each canopy was the figure of a bird in gold. His clothes that day were a robe of green Jerusalem cloth and underneath it fine loose robes of Egypt. He was dressed with wraps of silk and turbaned with a large turban. Before him drums and trumpets and pipes were played...

The palace itself with its bathing pool, three domestic courts, and up to a hundred rooms, is the largest single building complex in sub-Saharan Africa.

Posnansky 1978: 501

Source 6

For nothing was left for Kilwa to conquer, as it was mistress of Mombasa, Malindi, the islands of Pemba, Zanzibar, Mafia, Comoro, and many other settlements.

Moon 2005: 9

Source 7

The successors of Ali varied in talents and success. Several were deposed, one beheaded, while another was thrown down a well. Though the sultan possessed much power, his authority was obviously not absolute. If he failed to perform his duties, the local people or his own relatives might dethrone him.

Elkiss 1973: 123

Source 8

In terms of administration, a wazir (prime minister) was appointed, together with an amir (army commander), muhtasib (police chief), Qadi (Chief Justice). Beneath them was a bureaucracy of tax collectors, auditors and other minor officials. Later sultans appear to have delegated powers to these officials while they enjoyed a life of luxury.

Elkiss 1973: 126
